THEY were alike, this father and daugh ter. Lizzie was his youngest, and al-though she had attained the age of 18 she was still childish in her ways.

The judge placed his hand tenderly on the little curly head. "Where has my little daughter been?"
"Oh, I have been up to the ball talking with the housekeeper, and wandering through the great rooms; and O, papa, she really took me into the beautiful conservatory, and I saw such lovely, flaming passion flowers, and the great, creamy, magnolia blossoms, and, dear me, I can't tell you of all the lovely things."

She was suddenly stopped by seeing a genian approaching from the opposite side

"Mr. Ray, I believe."
The judge bowed.
"Agent for the St. Leon place?"

"Yes, sir."
"I came to see you in regard to it, and-" "And you are Mr. St. Leon's confidential clerk, Mr. Hartley! I believe I received a letter to-day from him informing me that you would arrive this week. Yes, yes; come right up to the house and we will talk over the repairs. Shall we begin them immediately?"

The St. Leon place was a new home for the judge and his little family of two daughters. It was not a great house in itself, but it was a part of the great estate of which young to occupy. The judge had arranged for the renting of the place through the mails, and

"Papa, you don't mean to say you have brought him home—a confidential clerk? You know there are the best rooms to be papered and cleaned, and our pink dresses to be made, against Harland St. pink dresses to be made, against Herbert St. Leon's arrival-Well, I shall see that he is put in the little room over the kitchen. He will never know the difference," and Blanche sank back in a studied attitude on the sofa, wondering if handsome Bert St. Leon would fancy her lovely pink morning dress that she had made for his special benefit.

The door of the dining-room was ajar, and Mr. Hartley, standing before the fire in the little parlor, had heard it all.

"Mr. Confidential Clerk, you are crying," and Lizzie pushed the white kitten from her lap and came over to his side. "I am sorry heard them, but never mind, I'll be your "Your friendship is dear to me, my little "Pardon me, young lady; but can you tell me something of the hall? What sort of n place is it?" "Lizzie, Lizzie! you are talking far more than is necessary. Go to your French, im-mediately!" A month had passed by. Mr. Hartley had changed his close apartments over the kitchen for more commodious ones at the village inn, whence he calmly superintended the projected improvements at the hall, and all the gossip exchanged between himself and Lizzie was in the course of her rambles

"They went from the house." Blanche was just coming out of hysterics. when there came a ring at the bell, and a gentleman bearing a foreign-looking car-petbag was ushered in.

"Is this Mr. Ray?"
The judge bowed.
"Is Mr. St. Leon here?"

A CONFIDENTIAL MAN. DEATH OF A HERO.

True Story of How Gen. W. P. Symons Was Fatally Wounded.

Commander of British, Seeing His Men Wavering, Started to Lend Them But Was Shot While on Way to Front.

The true story of how Sir Gen. William Penn Symons got his mortal wound at the battle of Glencoe, in South Africa is known at the war office at London, but has not yet been told in the English press. It is an open secret in official circles. The extreme vagueness of the acfull information was being kept back, and it has finally been secured.

As the action grew hot and the Brit-ish force was suffering badly, Gen. Symons ordered the Dublin fusileers and the King's royal rifles to advance on the main position of the Boers. The burgher marksmen met them with a galling fire. The lines wavered. The officers rallied the men and again they rushed forward in the face of a witherthey went, pressing sturdily forward.
